The goal of the project is to enhance the role of the Venice International Film Festival as a bridge builder supporting the production of independent quality films coming from Africa and Arab countries; providing concrete help to film production, and promoting the competitiveness of their audiovisual products on the international market. This year, in the framework of the VPB Focus on Germany, supported by German Films, one additional film has been selected. THE VENICE PRODUCTION BRIDGE WELCOMES THE 7 SELECTED WORK IN PROGRESS FILMS TO THE 11TH EDITION OF FINAL CUT IN VENICE

The signs from the Arab and African film industries this year are positive. We received no fewer than 74 work-in-progress films, an increase of 27% compared to last year. The cinemas in these regions are recovering a good rhythm of production and the projects are finally concretized on the set and reach the fateful and delicate last phase of post-production. This year, we are adding to the usual 6 titles of our selection a seventh film in co-production with a guest country of Venice Production Bridge 2023, Germany.

The FCV 2023 line-up thus presents a total of 7 films in post-production. The selection is, as usual, based on the essential criteria of quality and originality of the films, a good balance between fiction and documentary, and with an eye on the presence of women and films by directors making their debut.

For this eleventh edition, we have selected films by directors from seven different countries: Congo, Iraq, Lebanon, Palestine, Senegal, Tunisia, and South Africa with the particularity that two of them were shot in other countries, which is the sign of an interesting movement and exchange between countries in this area. I am referring to the film by the Tunisian Hind Meddeb, Sudan, When Poems Fall Apart and the one by the director of Lebanese descent Zaven Najjar, Allah Is Not Obliged which I would also like to underline is the first film of animation selected at FCV, inspired by the successful book of the same name by the Ivory Coast writer Ahmadou Kourouma and set in Sierra Leone and Liberia.

In the Sala Pasinetti we will be screening, at the stage of rough cut or assembly of sequences, four first works: the aforementioned animated film by Zaven Najjar, Allah Is Not Obliged; the documentary by the Iraqi Hussein Al-Asadi, She Was Not Alone; the fiction film in episodes by four young Congolese under the artistic supervision of Dieudo Hamadi, Life Is a Railroad, by Kevin Mavakala, Manassé, Kashala, Isaac Sahani and Tousmy Kilo and another co-directed fiction film, Carissa, by the South Africans Jason Jacobs and Devon Delmar. In addition to these first works, there is the second film by the Palestinian director Oscar-nominee Scandar Copti, Happy Holidays (included in the Focus on Germany) and two documentaries by female directors, Sudan, When Poems Fall Apart by Hind Meddeb and Zion Music by the Senegalese Rama Thiaw.

We are delighted to be able to reconfirm all our supporters, many of whom have been with us since the creation of FCV, while others have joined us over the years and we thank all of them in particular for their loyalty to the project: Laser Film, A Fabrica which replaces Mactari but keeps the invaluable collaboration of Jean-Guy Veran, Oticons, MAD Solutions, TitraFilm, Sub-Ti Ltd, Sub-Ti Access SrL, Rai Cinema, El Gouna Film Festival, Organisation Internationale de la Francophonie, Cinémathèque Afrique/Institut Français, Festival International du Film d’Amiens, Festival International de Films de Fribourg and Eye on Films. We also welcome the Red Sea International Film Festival for the second year running which, as well as awarding a prize, is also a special supporter of FCV.

In these eleven years of its lifetime, the FCV programme has positioned itself in the industry world as a platform for the encounter of African and Arab cinemas and has brought to the light filmmakers who have subsequently had important careers. I mention here only some of the award-winning directors who have presented their works in embryo at FCV in the past years: Alain Gomis, Tala Hadid, Kaouther Ben Hania, Soudade Kaadan, Lemohang Jeremiah Mosese, Suhaib Gasmalbari and Karim Ainouz and some debuting directors who have recently had international successes with their first films: Amjad Al Rasheed (Inshallah a Boy), Asmae El Moudir (The Mother of All Lies), Ahmed Yassin Al Daradj (Hanging Gardens) and Erige Sehiri (Under the Fig Trees).

We invite all Trade and Gold pass holders to take an active part in the screenings and the Q&A sessions to discover the new films that are coming from these areas but also to have the experience of a live presentation of a film in post-production which is often the first public screening of the film: it is a moment of great intensity and emotion which generates a deep and authentic level of understanding the film.

SYNOPSIS
Birahima is a ten-year-old boy living in Guinea. When his mother dies, he must reach his tutor, Aunt Mahan, who will take care of him. However, Mahan lives in Liberia where a fierce civil war is raging. Yacouba, a great grigriman and bandit, will guide him to Mahan – and sell some anti-bullet lucky charms in the process. But the travelers are attacked as soon as they cross the border. To save his life, Birahima has no other choice than to become a child soldier. “And, as tells us Birahima in his strong, ironic voice, to “seize the opportunity to become a great someone and earn good dollars, Faforo!”

DIRECTOR’S STATEMENT
 Liberia, has a dark history marked by exploitation and civil war, being a country founded in the 19th century as a place for freed American slaves. The novel Allah is not obliged by Ahmadou Kourouma explores the atrocities committed during the Liberian civil war, particularly by child soldiers. The author’s unique style, combining rawness and humor, captivates readers and sheds light on the conflict. Inspired by my personal experiences from the Lebanese civil war, I intend to adapt the novel into an animated film that highlights the plight of child soldiers while maintaining a darkly comedic tone. Animation allows for a broader perspective on the conflict and enables viewers to engage with the characters’ courage and flaws. I see animation as a medium that can evolve and express different perspectives. Despite its mythological elements, the story retains strong roots in reality. Through animation, the audience can be immersed in the diverse world of Liberia and gain a deeper understanding of the conflicts plaguing the world. The film aims to provoke reflection on the complex processes that lead to civil wars rather than simply showcasing violence.

DIRECTOR’S BIOGRAPHY

Carissa, a young woman living with her grandmother Wilhelmiena in a small village nestled in the Cederberg mountains, leads a stagnant life. Wilhelmiena disapproves of Carissa’s lack of ambition and incessant phone use, which fuels their constant bickering. In an attempt to steer Carissa in a different direction, she drags her to a presentation by Mont Royale, a business conglomerate taking over the rooibos tea land to build a new luxury golf estate. The company offers education programs for young applicants, which Wilhelmiena sees as an opportunity for Carissa. Unexpectedly, Hendrik, Carissa’s long-absent grandfather, visits one evening. As a rooibos farmer affected by Mont Royale’s takeover, Hendrik offers Carissa the chance to spend time with him in the mountains before the land is gone. Wilhelmiena opposes the idea. Nevertheless, Carissa causes trouble for herself and as a result, is driven out of the house by Wilhemiena one evening, compelling her to seek refuge in the mountains as her only available escape.
In the mountains with her grandfather, Carissa is faced with a different way of life. Working on the rooibos fields without modern conveniences and distractions, Carissa discovers there is more to life than her grandmother’s expectations, after finding solace and purpose in the mountains under the sun and stars. The journey that she then goes through is fundamentally about her re-enchantment and identification with a world she has always known.

DIRECTORS’ STATEMENT
Carissa began development in 2017. Over the years, Carissa as a character and as a woman took on many faces and narratives.
Although they didn’t make it through to the final screenplay, these detours in our writing process were nevertheless essential. We as writers had to first discover who Carissa is, not, so as to find who Carissa is. Underlying all the discarded narratives was that Carissa ultimately goes one step closer towards embracing who she is. Out of years of hurt, anger, and confusion, Carissa begins the journey of accepting herself; this is a journey we as directors deeply empathize with.
Through close collaboration with the Wupperthal community (Cederberg, South Africa) over six years of development, we recognised the impact the film would have there. Having endured a devastating fire that brought significant changes to their lives gave the film a crucial role in restoring spirit, fostering unity, and strengthening faith in the community.
The making of Carissa was a humbling experience, notably when the women elders organised a community gathering for the film which also served as a fundraiser for the church. To enrich the film with authenticity and truth, we cast community members in leading roles drawing from their own experiences as mothers, herdies, harvesters, and elders – individuals deply connected to the sacred force that defines the community.
We are honoured to be in Venice this year.
SYNOPSIS

As a last resort, he confides in his close friend Dr. Walid, who also admires Rami’s sister, Fifi. Hanan, Rami’s mother, faces financial difficulties. To save their home, she plans to file a compensation claim for Fifi’s car accident injury, adding complexity by involving Dr. Walid, a trusted confidante who may help rectify an error in Fifi’s medical file. Miri, an Israeli nurse, grapples with the depression of her adolescent daughter Ori. Miri’s complications intensify when she learns about her sister’s pregnancy with Rami, who’s Arab. Fifi struggles to hide her non-virginity to save her family’s reputation.

LOGLINE

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT
Happy Holidays explores the profound impact of norms, values, and expectations on individuals, particularly women in patriarchal societies. The film tells the story of four interconnected characters that bring forth their unique realities, highlighting the complexities between genders, generations, and cultures. As the film unfolds, shifting perspectives and traversing time, the events gain unexpected and thought-provoking significance. The film invites viewers to critically examine the larger societal structures that shape their lives by showcasing the struggles of relatable individuals trapped within a corrupt system. The viewers are encouraged to reflect on their own realities and consider how they may be complicit in constructing such systems. To maintain authenticity and capture the rawness of actual events, I have chosen to work with non-professional actors who share similar backgrounds with the characters. Visually, Happy Holidays draws inspiration from the social-realism approach of filmmakers like Ken Loach. The film was shot with handheld cameras in real locations, capturing the unfolding events with natural lighting to enhance the realistic style.

Scandar Copti is an Oscar-Nominated filmmaker and visual artist. His first feature film Ajami (co-directed by Yaron Shani), won the Camera d’Or Special Mention at the Cannes Film Festival and was nominated for the 82nd Academy Awards in the Best Foreign Film category. Scandar was part of the team that launched the Doha Film Institute, where he headed the DFI’s Education department until 2011. He then headed the Film and New Media program at NYU Abu Dhabi from 2014 to 2017. SYNOPSIS
Christine is the head of finance at the maternity hospital in Kintambo. Her job is to make sure that all of the patients have paid their hospital fees. Remy is the CEO of one of the country’s largest mining companies. His attraction for women will tarnish his relationship with his family, especially his 12-year-old son. Mukanya, a night taxi driver, dreams of reaching the Schengen area but life does not make it easy for him. Viya, who just lost her father unexpectedly, will cross the path with each of them.

LOGLINE
Viya fled her home after the death of her father. She hits her own road. On her way she meets Mukanya, night taxi driver, who dreams of leaving the country; Christine, head of the maternity ward in Kintambo; and Kenny, a schoolboy who is trying to save his father’s reputation, involved in a sex tape scandal.
A new generation of Africans is coming. One who has not known colonization, nor repeated wars (for some), who has known the “Arab Spring”, who communicates via Facebook or WhatsApp, and who feels an irrepressible desire to claim their own lives and our immediate surroundings.

We are a part of this rising generation.

We are a group of four young Congolese directors based in Kinshasa. We have different backgrounds; some of us have worked in documentaries, others in music videos, commercials, or television series. Yet, for all of us, this is our first work of fiction. Thus, we all thought to take inspiration by our own lives and our immediate surroundings.

Toussemy will explore the problem of inheritance within certain Congolese families today, a system that is as archaic as it is revolting. Tradition dictates that after the death of the father in a family, with or without a will, the children and their mother are dispossessed of everything.

Isaac will tell the story of a taxi-man, who, tired of working during the day because of police harassment, decides to work at night.

Kevin will talk about the strange and widespread practices in many hospitals in Kinshasa, where babies are held “prisoners” after delivery, until their parents pay the hospital fees. Finally Manassé will address the thorny subject of “sextapes” that wreak havoc in many families.

Despite the seemingly different features and characters of these four stories, they have several points in common. First, obviously, they are all set in the Democratic Republic of the Congo today. Second, these four short films are all linked by a character who crosses through all the stories: Viya, a young woman with a destiny full of mistreatment and torment (a bit like the Congolese people) but who nevertheless refuses to sink into fatality.

DIRECTORS’ BIOGRAPHIES

Kevin Mavakala was born in 1997 in Kinshasa. Graduated in Dramatic Art (Cinema Option), he is an author and director. His film La Star won the prize for best international short film at the Festival Ecrans Noirs 2021 Cameroon, and was selected for the Short Film Corner of the 75th edition of the Cannes Film Festival.

Manassé Kashala was born in Kinshasa in 2000. After working in documentaries, others in music videos, commercials, or television series. Yet, for all of us, this is our first work of fiction. Thus, we all thought to take inspiration by our own lives and our immediate surroundings.

Toussemy Kilo will address the thorny subject of “sextapes” that wreak havoc in many families.

SYNOPSIS
She Was Not Alone is a film about the inner, poetic world of Fatima, an inspiring and independent 60-year-old semi-nomadic woman who has chosen to remain in Iraq’s southeastern marshlands despite facing ecological collapse. She lives alone with her beloved animals on an island enclave of reed-mat and mud brick dwellings. This observational documentary follows Fatima for an entire year as she faces obstacles produced by prolonged seasons of drought and flooding, which are troubling markers of climate change in the delicate wetland ecosystem she inhabits. It visually narrates her daily rhythms as she navigates this thick, lush waterscape populated by islands of reed, migratory birds, and buffalo herds to conduct her rhythms of care, stewardship, and play with her non-human kin, which immediately endear her to the viewer. While her community has faced countless challenges and shrunken over the past century due to military occupation, nearby oil refineries and oil flares, the draining of the marshes, and persecution, Fatima fights to hold on to her life and her buffaloes amidst the existential threat posed by climate change. But she may have to migrate to the city and lose her dearest possessions: her animals and her independence.

LOGLINE
A poetic meditation on the life of Fatima, a nomadic woman who lives alone in Iraq’s wetlands with her animals. As ecological collapse forces migration to the city, our collective fates become intertwined with hers: will she stay or be dispossessed of everything she knows and loves?
DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

I was born and raised in the city of Basra in southern Iraq. People often refer to us as “Shurugi,” which means those who are from the east, and constitute what urbanized people call the primitive migrants who came from the marshes to the city and could not keep pace with modern civilization. When I was 18 years old in 2015, I was a bit innocent and curious to learn more about my tribe – Bani Asad. The environment of the marshes fascinated me due to its natural beauty and colors. At one time, these marshlands covered 20,000 square kilometers across three of Iraq’s southern provinces – Basra, Dhi Qar, and Maysan – and inundated the Iran-Iraq border. However, due to environmental mismanagement, persecution, and impoverishment, many people from the marshes were forced to migrate to cities from the 1920s onwards. Moreover, this was exacerbated in the early 1990s, when Saddam Hussein began a devastating large-scale campaign to drain the marshes after an uprising began in the area and nearly deposed him. By 2003, less than 10 percent of the wetlands still remained. While some marsh inhabitants began to return and helped reflood the site with the support of international organizations and local government agencies, the marshes never returned to their pre-1990s state. Four years later, in 2019, I visited the marshes again and met a number of people. But I was particularly captivated by the story and spirit of Fatima, who seemed content with her life in the wilderness of the marshes and caring for her animals. Her ability to commune with nature and create her own world, revealed a loving intimacy. It reminds us of our potential to restore our own relationships with nature. Her positive energy and perseverance is a model for all Iraqi people and Arab women in particular who have faced innumerable obstacles in their lives.

SYNOPSIS
Shajane, Maha, Muzamil, Rufaida, and the voice of the poet Chaikhoon are the characters in the film. They are Sudanese in their twenties, politically active and artistically creative. This film is a cinematic chorus, the collective portrait of a generation fighting for freedom with their words, poems and chants. Faced with a corrupt army guilty of war crimes in Darfur, Kordofan and Blue Nile, these individuals had every reason to lose faith. Without the dream guiding them and the might of poetic discourse, they could never have overthrown the former regime.
Since I met them on the revolutionary sit-in that lasted 57 days at the Army headquarters in Khartoum, I've been filming every step of their journey. They survived the 3rd of June 2019 massacre - when the army attacked the sit-in, killing hundreds of people in just a few hours. They resisted the military coup of October 2021, until the war started, causing death and destruction everywhere, forcing them to take the roads of exile.

LOGLINE
This film is a portrait of Sudan as a poem as well as a love letter to the country. Shajane, Muzamil, Maha, Rufaida. As their stories unfold and intertwine, the film reassembles fragments of an ongoing revolution and the unfair battle of the voices of youth pitted against military might.
In Sudan, people recite poetry as easily as they breathe. For the Sudanese it’s a tool of resistance. Poetry emerges in conversations, in demonstrations, on walls. These “epic poems” are written as history is made. As a filmmaker, I am a translator. As I pursued my quest to translate this beautiful poetry, I perceive the outlines of a new post-Islamist era.

During Sudan’s thirty years of dictatorship, religion was used to control daily life. The Sudanese revolutionaries in the film and hundreds of others now reject this. They believe that faith is a private matter. The new generation is campaigning for freedom of conscience as described in this famous poem: “They kill us in the name of religion. But Islam tells us: rise up against tyrants! A bullet does not kill. Silence does.”

Sudan is at the crossroads of worlds that I have frequented since childhood. My mother left Morocco and my father Tunisia in the seventies to escape dictatorship, searching for freedom in France. It’s been three generations of attempting decolonization to change oppressive regimes in Africa and Middle East, largely still in vain. This film is about how to face this impossible change.
SYNOPSIS
I am music that crossed the Atlantic, she is poetic lyrics. You are a political struggle, they are a spirituality from the cradle of humankind. We are the African Reggae. My film is the tale of the African Reggae Spirit. I do not tell a single story but stories forming a coherent whole, from 1976 to the present day, where songs and hidden meanings allow us to travel through the political history of Africa. From one conflict to another, one spirituality to another, one mythology to a film... A collective epic like the African continent. Welcome to Zion.

LOGLINE

DIRECTOR’S STATEMENT
Since 18th April 1980, celebration of the independence of Zimbabwe, Reggae Music spread in Africa by supporting political and social struggles for justice and democracy.
Within 43 years, African reggae evolved, bringing through its instruments and rhythms, a freshness, and a singularity.
But for me, reggae is a family story, a political and spiritual awareness.
The story of my father and of a small blue room, and a K7 radio in 1989. Following the Senegalese-Mauritanian conflict, he was stripped of his Mauritanian citizenship. As he remained Senegalese, he returned to Pikine, one popular suburb of Dakar. Ruined and exiled, in this blue room with no windows, Toots’ rocking voice echoed, while my father mumbled lyrics to Pressure Drop. I first encountered reggae at the age of five when my aunty, brought back Blondy’s album Jah Glory from Ivory Coast. I remember the emotion felt when I danced to Brigadier Sabari. Quickly, I learned and discovered with it the history of African independence and emblematic men such as Marcus Garvey.
This music was meaningful because its message and political and social demands were the same as my parents. Reggae changed our lives like no other music.
